Special thanks for invaluable advice and encouragement are extended to Chandler S. Robbins, without whose advice the project could not have been accomplished; Deborah V. Howard, who inspired the project with her lecture at the Vermont Bird Conference in June 1975; Robert A. Sincerbeaux, for his unflagging support; and to James D. Stewart and others of the Vermont Fish and Wildlife Department. Grateful thanks and recognition are extended to Vermont Institute of Natural Science staff members Walter G. Ellison, Nancy L. Martin, and Annette L. Gosnell; to Carol M. Wood, who patiently and accurately entered the text into the word processor; and to Peter Shea and the staff of Northern Cartographic for the careful preparation of the maps.

Grateful acknowledgments are extended to the following people for reviewing species accounts: Cheryl M. Boise, Richard J. Clark, William S. Clark, William Crenshaw, Richard Holmes, Lawrence Kilham, Neil E. King, Donald McCrimmon, Katherine McKeever, Thomas R. Myers, G. Frank Oatman, J. M. C. Peterson, Chandler S. Robbins, Mark Scott, Charles Smith, Robert N. Spear, Jr., James D. Stewart, Scott Sutcliffe, Jeff Wallin, and Tom C. Will.

Thanks are also extended to the North American Nest Record Program of the Cornell Laboratory of Ornithology for permission to use its data; the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service's Patuxent Wildlife Research Center for the Breeding Bird Survey data and analysis; and Charles Johnson and the state park naturalists in the Vermont Department of Forests, Parks, and Recreation.

Thanks for financial support for conducting the Atlas Project and for preparing the manuscript for publication is extended to: the Richard King Mellon Foundation, the Cecil Howard Charitable Trust, the World Wildlife Fund—U.S., the John W. Hanes Foundation, an individual who wishes to remain anonymous, the Eva Gebhard-Gourgaud Foundation, the Green Mountain National Forest of the National Forest Service, and the Connecticut River Watershed Council.
